People can be republican, democrat or completely refrained from politics, can agree with the war or can be against it, can support the president or disapprove him, can be the follower of any religion or can be atheist and the line goes on and on with any kind of division of our society but there's one thing that no American can question. The US soldier. And so their ultimate loyalty to this country, a loyalty that we all should embrace. Here's another fine example of it:

Marine sergeant William "Spanky" Gibson lost a leg in combat in Iraq, but he hasn't let that stop him from returning to the mainstream of life — and to active duty. Two years ago, he lost a leg to a sniper's bullet in Iraq. Today, he's back in the combat zone — by his own choice. If you notice an unusual spring in his step as he goes about his duties at Camp Fallujah in Iraq, mark it down to the wonders of the modern technology that went into the carbon-fiber prosthetic leg Gibson wears. He may have surrendered a leg in serving his country, but he's far from handicapped. "As soon as a person says disabled, and they think they're disabled, they might as well keep their butt in a chair and not do anything the rest of their life," the 37-year-old career Marine said. As he goes about his duties for the 1st Marine Expeditionary force as a weapons coordinator in operations command, Gibson is an inspiration to his fellow soldiers and even to the commander in chief. "When Americans like Spanky Gibson serve on our side, the enemy in Iraq doesn't got a chance," President Bush said in a recent appearance in the Pentagon to mark the fifth anniversary of the invasion of Iraq.
