Staff Sgt Robert Miller a 24 year-old Green Beret who died after saving the lives of 22 men in Afghanistan received the Medal of Honor the White House announced on October 5th. He was the youngest member of his squad. On a mission to find high-value enemy insurgents, Miller's team of eight elite American soldiers and 15 Afghan troops were moving along a rocky, snow covered trail when the unit was ambushed. Miller's captain was injured almost immediately.

As the squad took cover Robert realized they were badly outnumbered from above. Rather than retreat to safer ground he ran directly at the enemy, killing numerous militants and providing his men with the cover they needed to escape. His parents were told he saved the lives of 22 men, seven of them fellow members of the US Army Special Forces. "As they got near the structure there was ambush, they were attacked by over 100 insurgents -- they had hidden behind boulders, it was a very intense situation," his mother Maureen Miller said. Robert Miller joined the Army after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and became a Green Beret in 2005. He died holding his rifle, firing until it ran out of ammunition. He had thrown his last grenade and fought for 25 minutes after having been shot twice in the shoulder and ribs.

Army Spc. Salvatore Giunta is the first living soldier since Vietnam awarded military's highest honor. "Sgt. Giunta distinguished himself by acts of gallantry at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty," the White House, which has not yet announced the specifics for the ceremony, said in a written statement last month.

He raced head-on into an enemy ambush to save the lives of two American soldiers during a deadly fire fight.

Giunta says he doesn't feel like a hero. "No more than every single service member in the United States military today," he said.
